

Lift Truck Operator

Our instructors have been professionally trained and are RTITB accredited.

Who should attend

This course is designed for those operating lift trucks who, in order to comply with the Health and Safety Commission's approved code of practice and guidance, must undergo approved training and testing.

Key benefits

In addition to compliance with current regulations this course ensures lift truck operators are trained to the highest standards and are fully aware of the safety implications of operating heavy machinery. On completing the course delegates are registered with the National Operator Recognition Scheme (NORS) which is a centralised registration and certification system for lift truck operators and other mechanical handling equipment drivers.

To ensure compliance with accreditation FTA is required to operate a maximum trainee/instructor/truck ratio of 3:1:1 for basic training.

Course content

It is imperative that operatives have at least the minimum amount of training advised. This varies upon the experience and number of delegates.

What is NORS?

The National Operator Registration Scheme is a centralised registration and certification system for lift-truck operators and other mechanical handling equipment drivers.

Why has NORS been introduced?

- To eradicate counterfeit operator certificates issued by trainers not properly accredited by RTITB Ltd
- To align with potential and forthcoming European and other international requirements and to provide internationally recognised and transferable records of training and competence
- To reinforce adherence to training standards by only certifying and registering fully accredited training
- To raise confidence in operator training, competence and qualification and support high quality training provided by accredited training organisations
- To provide operators with a straightforward means to obtain replacement or duplicate certificates in the event of loss or damage to originals
